

HOW TO GET MARRIED WITH EASE AND QUICKLY IN 2022

I know you are really curious what how is about getting married with ease and as quickly as possible. Yes, there is no doubting that there are a lot of persons out there who wish they are married, or at least, they should be at the verge of getting married. At least, personally, my girlfriend wishes that we are married already because she is tired of missing me. By the time this book gets to her, I don't know how she might feel though, but hey, the most important thing is, we all discovering hidden ways of getting married with ease, at least before the end of 2022. The highest pick in this book is that, you might end up, after the simple hidden approach we will be unraveling in this book get married before the first quarter of the year.

I know that sounds pretty much like a joke right? Well, it's okay to feel that way actually because you are human, I can understand, but in the midst of all that, reserve some little faith, add some pints of hope and read on.

It is not strange that there are lots of factors responsible for the low marriage events that happen in a year. If you do not understand that, let me make it simple for you. I believe you have some friends, right? Both male and female who are in their respective relationships, let us say, you have ten of such friends, now count, how many of them got married last year, 2021? Okay, they may not be your friend, but you happen to know them, how many of those persons got married? Maybe you who is reading this book right now did not marry last year. That is what I am talking about.

Marriage, for many people, is like a dream that propelled their childhood and transits them into adulthood. These people have the location pictured and arranged, the dress pictured and arranged, and even the wedding menu pictured and arranged all in the head. But for several reasons, one cannot in advance picture the person they would get married to. Although with time you may find someone worth adding to the 'pictured and arranged' list, but again, but as you know, it is not every one of us who are lucky when it comes to marriage and relationship. But that doesn't mean we do not deserve to live our dreams and have that big fat wedding.

As you know, it is not everyone has a year or so much time to devote to planning a marriage.

Even if you do, not everyone wants to spend that long worrying about all of the little details. Maybe the bride or groom is being deployed soon, or a couple wants a gravely ill family member to witness their union, or they're just simply eager to start married life, there's nothing wrong with planning your nuptials fast. Whether you have two weeks or two months to spend putting together your day, getting married on the quick can have just as many meaningful moments as a traditionally planned one, as long as you're flexible. Here's what to do when time is at a premium.

Come up with a budget.

All your choices, from what you'll wear to the kind of meal you'll serve, will be based on how much you have to spend. An effective way to keep costs low is to have a small guest list, which is also a good idea when you have limited planning time.

Plan the ceremony and reception.

Consider having them in the same place. That way, you'll only be dealing with one venue and one event planner, which will be far more efficient. Look into any wedding packages a venue offers-if they've already assembled a ceremony musician, photo booth, and bridal bouquet, for example, you can cross those off your to-do list. And since Saturday-night receptions at popular event spaces, including hotel ballrooms, were likely booked months ago, consider a Friday night or Sunday afternoon wedding. Rates may be lower too. Or look into restaurants with party rooms.

Find an officiant.

Do this as soon as you have a date nailed down. You can go the traditional route with a clergy member, judge, or county clerk, or ask a close friend or relative to be ordained or deputized online to officiate at your wedding.

Send out invitations and create a wedding website.

You could have customized invitations in the mail within a week. Online stationers let you choose a theme, color, and font, then print the invites with your specific wedding details, which takes only two or three days. If there's no time for that, call or email each person on your guest list. Ask for a swift answer-people tend to be pokey when it comes to RSVPing so try to get an answer on the spot. You should also share the link to your wedding website since it will be the easiest way for guests to stay in the loop. Rather than designing one from scratch, go with a pre-built option and keep adding more information as time goes by. When you register for gifts, include links to stores.

Form a bridal party.

This is up to you to have one or not. (All you need to get married is a witness-bridesmaids and groomsmen are optional.) If you do want attendants, limit them to one or two for each of you-the fewer people you have to keep track of, the more time you'll save.

Your best bet is finding an off-the-rack dress at a department store or a sample sale dress at a bridal salon. Avoid buying anything that would require major alterations, which may take too much time. Your groom can rent a tuxedo or suit, or wear one he already owns that's in good condition.

Book a photographer, musicians, florist, and baker.

If your top picks are booked, ask for a recommendation for another photographer. Be sure to check out his wedding portfolio before signing a contract. Do the same for the other vendors.

Order the rings.

If there's no time for engraving before the wedding, do it after the honeymoon.

Apply for a marriage license.

A few states have a waiting period between when you apply for a license and when it's issued; in Minnesota, for example, there's a five-day wait. Check with the county clerk's office in the state where you're planning to wed. In most states, you have 60-90 days to complete a ceremony using that particular marriage license.

Verify all details with vendors.

Do this a week before the wedding as well as the day before. Confirm all dates, delivery times, locations, payments, and point person's name and cell phone number. Double-check that they have your cell phone number.
